'regulars' of Spanish bullfights, tourists and locals. I had the opportunity to sit at the section where all the ardent fans, better known as aficionados usually sits. I was talking to them just before the match began and I had shocked them with my ignorance of the sport. For example, I was not aware that six bulls are usually lined up to be killed by three matadors during the corrida. Each encounter normally last fifteen minutes. I was appalled at the thought of having to sit through six deaths. Just as I was rethinking my stay, I looked up to see three matadors, each followed by their assistants, marches into the ring. Well, perhaps I could leaves after watching one fight.
